Physical Description:

Robert Beardsley gave the museum this collection upon selling the house at 26 Summer Street in 2005. The house, designed by George Meacham of Boston, had been in the possession of the Lord family from the time it was built in 1885 until Lucinda Lord sold it in 1983 to Beardsley. The collection is very rich and varied, dating back to documents dated 1854. It is important because the house is one of the finest examples of Queen Anne architecture in the state, if not the nation, and Hartley Lord was meticulous in keeping records. He kept the specifications for the house, including the general, contractor and mason’s specs, with handwritten notes in the margins. It should be noted that the general contractor for the house was John H. Ferguson, who had a sash and window blind factory of the Mousam River. In addition to the drawings for the house there are plans for remodeling of the house c. 1910 by Hutchins & French of Boston. There is also a set of original drawings of the Lord Tomb at Hope Cemetery done by George Meacham, renovations by William Barry to the beach cottage at Lord’s Point at Kennebunk Beach, and a set of plot plans for the property. There is a small collection of newspapers about important events: the 1947 fire, the 1936 hurricane, the death of President Kennedy and the first man to walk on the moon, etc. It is very rare that these original drawings of the house survive, and the museum has been given the opportunity to care for them.

The collection consists of a group of photographs the interior and exterior of the house and the inhabitants, taken from the time the house was constructed in 1885 until the 1960s. Most of the photographs are from 1885 to c. 1920. The original drawings of the house, working drawings and the renovations to the beach cottage show the changes to the houses. The Tomb remains in Hope Cemetery.

This collection is housed in two half document boxes, one document box of photographs (with the photographs) and the drawings and plans are housed in Metal Cabinet 3. The books are housed with the Maine Authors books, with the exception of the lectures at the Newcomen Society (which are housed with Newcomen Society pamphlets). The chair and wastebasket are housed in Building 3. The newspapers are housed in the appropriate newspaper boxes.
